Duration of Post: 6 months

Today law and regulation are the final defense to establish governance reform in the direction of openness, responsiveness, accountability, professionalism, effectiveness, efficiency, and anti corruption-collusion-nepotism (KKN). The openness era has not been completed with an appropriate policy that regulates the right of people to obtain access to information and it is the government's duty to provide the access. Absence of a policy results in no understanding of boundaries of duty and rights in disclosure of information between government and the people.

Disclosure of information is relatively new, therefore efforts to introduce, to disseminate, and to simulate the policy are more essential than to emphasize on law enforcement.

To provide easy access in obtaining information of development activities, the government will develop information disclosure policy mainly for projects funded by foreign loans and grants.
